SMOKING UNDER SKIN

(100 x 100 cm – colored pencils on canvas)

The eye dwells on the value of what is difficult and mysterious in the in the drama of each individual's existence: the lines. We know nothing of those the lines; indeed their anonymity is an important aspect. Although logic tells us they have been brought together for the purpose of being looked, they do not look as if they have been directed to act in a certain manner. They remain inviolate, acting according to their own desires and needs that have no relationship to the our constraints.

The lines notates a kind of chaos, the beginning of time or the end: are we staring at things at the point of their collapse or at the moment before everything coheres? We know only that more is happening that we can understand, perhaps more that we can bear.

The lines are like words in the mind before they are produced: you suddenly speak them, but where were they the moment before?
